Biographical Data:

Ms. Wilkins, with a Master of Science, in Dietetics, is a dietitian with over 35 years experience in all phases of food service and nutritional care. She began teaching food safety in 1985. Hundreds of classes and thousands of students have given her extensive insight into the interests, learning abilities and attitudes of the food service worker. For the past 23 years, she has owned and operated the company called Safe-at-the-Plate® which specializes in food safety issues. As the sole developer of Safe-at-the-Plate®, Ms. Wilkins has gained experience and reputation in the industry and is known for her quality instruction and materials. Currently, Ms. Wilkins and her staff work with corporations, small business owners, health care facilities, grocery stores and produce operations to encourage behavioral change in food safety practices. Ms. Wilkins is a consultant to several health care facilities in which she conducts regular audits on food safety and food service operations to strive for safety in caring for this vulnerable population group.

Description of your presentation/course:

Since 1986, Safe at the Plate® has been recognized as a leader in innovative food safety education. Safe-at-the-Plate® seminars are aimed at retention. Student involvement and repetition are two keys to the success of the presentation. Material is organized so students easily grasp concepts and relationships. We emphasize the 'why' rather than the 'what', so students understand the rationale behind regulations. Rather than memorizing lists of facts that are readily forgotten, they retain information and are able to navigate through the application questions so characteristic of the national tests.
